I never saw but one detective in my life, and he was pointed out to me by a friend as he was passing by us on the street. Breaking Steers.

The mode of breaking steers practiced in Kentucky is thus described: Where the establishment is a large one, and there are some to be broken in every year the extere and practice here recommended would seem to be eligible and judicious: Get a strong post, eight feet long by two thick; plant it three and a half feet in the ground, well rammed; round or level the top of the post and leave a pin to it, or make a mortice and insert a strong two-inch pin of tough wood in it, perpendicularly at the too, lix or eight inches long. Then get a tough sapling twenty-five feet long; measure off at the small end of it the usual length of a yoke, and bore the holes for your bows. Then bore three holes, or more if you choose, four, eight and twelve feet from the other end of the sapling, of the size of the pin in the top of the post, giving the shortest lever itst, fraw your steers up, let them be young or old, gentle or wild, it makes no differences yoke them to the end of the pole; but instead of tying their tails together, if you wish to avoid bob-tail oxen, tie their loins to avoid bob-tail oxen, the their loins together with a good rope, wrap up their head halters, clear the front, and let them go; round and round they will go with a tush drunk—drunker, still the grout, and groaning, down they drop. For a while they lie panting and looking wild; then leap as if suddenly frightened, rush round and round again. grow drunk and drop again. Leave them, they will repeat the experiment, until, reeling, they will stop or stand. In a few hours you may lead them around by their halters. Referring to this Presentation Watch, he says: "When I left London the watch was six seconds fast, and on my arrival at Singapore it was only three seconds slow, a most extraordinary performance for a watch, as I carried it on my person the whole time. I compared it every day with my chronometers on the passage out, and it seldom or ever differed one second from them; in fact, I found it almost, if not as good as my chronometers, which is a great deat to say for a watch carried about and subject to all kinds of jolts." -London, England, The Watchmaker, Jeweller and Silversmith, Feb. 5, 1883.

> The Peril of Travelers. A man who lately held the position of night telegraph operator at one of the stations on a New England railroad has related to a reporter of the New Haven Union a personal experience which serves to illustrate the chances of disaster to which travelers are constantly exposed. He was the only man in the dropped asleep at his instrument and the next thing he knew he awoke to hear the rumble of an approaching train, and his telegraphic call vigor-ously sounded on the receiver before him. To his dismay he perceived that his right hand and arm were asleep, as the common expression is, and totally useless, and it was only with great difficulty that he could give an intelligible response to the signal with his left hand and scrawl a brief memorandum of the instructions which followed. English Investments in American Cattle.

soon as I could find a decent place else-

According to a Western operator it appears that during the last few years the English have invested heavily in American stock cattle, and are now reaping a rich reward for their ventures. It is estimated that nearly onesixth of all the new herds in the country are owned by English capital. That the English have hit it so far there is not a doubt, but whether their good fortune will continue is quite another matter. Many say that the present high price of beef is due to the large body of cattle withdrawn from the market to raise herds. The enterprise of the English has aroused the Americans, and American capital is now seeking investment in cattle-raising out West. It is the large amount of foreign capital seeking investment in cattle that has driven the price up so high. Cattle this spring are higher than ever before for stock purposes, and twenty-eight dollars, thirty dollars and thirty-two dollars are not considered too high prices to ask. I hope soon to see cattle lower, when they can be bought for say sixteen dollars to twenty-five dollars per head. Not that I am sanguine that such will be the case. The cattle business has been so long neglected that to their sorrow as dealth seizes upon them it can not be picked up at once in the face of a population of 55,000,000 of people and their enormous demands.

> Get money, honestly if you can, but get money," was a foolish father's advice to his son. Get money, if you can honestly, makes but a slight alteration in the order of the words, but varies the sentiment considerably. There is no harm in making money. It answereth all things, Used rightly, it is a power for good, and there is money enough in the world to form a lever by which the mass of humanity could be lifted, to a certain extent, out of its depths of sorrow and despair. Money we must have for money makes the mare go. Some can make money who have no faculty for saving. Would you save you must know how to deny those who would borrow and never repay as well as those who beg simply because they are too lazy to work. There are men who never want to see you except to ask the favor of a loan. They will ask for just one word with you, and that one word is sure to be money. An impecunious fellow met a rich acquaintance, and not liking to ask directly for a loan, said, "Friend Smith, if you had ten dollars in your pecket and I was to ask you must know how to deny those who would

will call him. He was very sick. Con-sumption had fastened its fangs upon him. He had long neglected catarrh, and laughed at the idea of taking anything for it when advised to do so, and so went from bad to worse. His lungs became diseased, a hacking, church-yard cough racked him almost to pieces, and he was fast wasting away. A mere shadow of his former self, he scarcely slept at all at night, or slept only to dream horrible dreams. Talk of nightmare! A whole circus troupe, horses and all, seemed to make his bed the arena of their wild performances. In this case money did not make the mare go, for he spent a deal of money on doctors and physics and was nothing bettered. He ate little, and was fast going down to an un-timely grave, leaving his wife a widow and his four bright children orphans, when, lo! on one eventful night he dreamed for once a bright and happy dream, which our next paragraph will relate.

Death, the black-visaged monster, had until then stared him in the face, but the dream brought him hope. He saw a bright, white-robed angel in his dream, who said: "I come to bring you good news. Here is your cure—sure, safe, harmless, prompt, and reliable. Get well and seek to take health thereby to others. Behold the cure!" With these words the angel was gone, but With these words the angel was gone, but ere the trail of light which followed frim had vanished the dreamer saw glittering in the light three golden letters—G. M. D. "What can it mean?" he said to himself, as he awoke from his slumber. "I have had a Good Many Dreams before, but never such as this." Startled and surprised, he aroused his wife and to her related his vision. Also she could not salve the probvision. Alas, she could not solve the problem. Remembering all the medical advice, and the physic, and the expense involved since her husband became sick, she expressed the hope that the letters were not intended to suggest that a Good Many Doctors must yet be consulted in addition to all that had been interviewed. He groaned in reply and remarked that if he had to consult any more there would have to be a Gold Mine Discovered in order to pay them.

Level day for a week he and his faithful spouse searched diligently for a key to the problem. In the dictionary, in such newspapers as they happened to have, in books, on placards on the walls—every water they sought—Hoping to find a cine. Letters stand for words, and they hoped to light upon the words that would suggest the cure. the explanation. Simple, of course, why had he not thought of it before? what a cerelation! Here was hope for him and for all consumptives. Here, hope for suffering friends and neighbors. That night he scarce could sleep, but when he did, he again saw a bright vision of golden letters, in fact, a Glittering Monogram Deciphered readily, and reading G. M. D.; and again P. P.
